Case for Mezuzah - August 17th

The common expression is, "My home is my castle." But the Jewish people rely not on the fortitude of their walls but on the strength of their spirit, as expressed in the mezuzah hanging on their doors. What is the meaning of this scroll, and why is it so important?

Better than Perfect - August 24th

If we were perfect, life would be a lot easier. But is that really what we want? Aaron, becoming High Priest after his involvement in the Golden Calf, teaches that perfection isn't achieved at birth. Rather, by overcoming personal struggles and challenges, we achieve the ideal.

Bad Blood - August 31st

Numerous times the Torah mentions the prohibition against eating blood. Not that you'd want to eat it, but if meat is kosher, what's so bad about the red fluid found within? This class probes beneath the skin of the Torah's aversion to blood, providing us a guide to living a kosher life.

Life Behind Bars - Sept 7th

Perhaps our prison systems indicate our rigorous sense of justice, but could there be a more productive way of "correction" than years spent locked away? Understanding why Jewish law doesn't promote incarceration reveals Torah's unique approach to crime and punishment.

Read Between the Lines - Sept 14th

Our reception is considered our marriage with G-d; exile is likened to divorce. But is it really possible for the Jewish people to separate from G-d? By hiding the laws of marriage in between the laws of divorce, the Torah points to the depth of our relationship with G-d.

Journey of the Soul - Sept 21st

Heaven, hell, and the world to come: all loaded terms. But what is the Jewish take on life after death? And what difference does it make now? By exploring these matters, this class gives an empowering perspective of what we are doing here.
